Ilichev to Return to Peking

According to the Agence France Presse, the chief Soviet negotiator at the Sino-Soviet border talks, Deputy Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev, will return to Peking on February 12. The negotiations have been suspended since last August when Ilichev left. In mid-November Ambassador Stoessel was told that Ilichev would be going to Peking at some time in the future to show Soviet good faith.

Ilichev returns to Peking after a period during which both China and the USSR have forcibly restated their positions on the issues that have stalled negotiations since their inception in 1969. Recent Chinese statements, including Premier Chou En-lai's major speech last month, have insisted upon conditions Moscow has consistently found unacceptable. It is unlikely, under these circumstances, that any movement will appear on either side if, indeed, another round of border talks begins.

Ilichev's reported arrival comes two days before the 25th anniversary of the Sino-Soviet Treaty of Friendship. This treaty has been ignored by both sides in public in recent years, but the Soviets may intend to mark this anniversary with publicity proclaiming their desire to improve Sino-Soviet relations. They could point to Ilichev's presence in Peking as evidence of their good intentions.

Moscow Announces Plans for the 30th Anniversary of World War II

The Soviets are preparing to make the 30th anniversary of victory in Europe a major domestic propaganda event and are trying to generate extensive international participation as well. A CPSU Central Committee announcement on February 9 outlines plans for the celebration. Nationwide activities are concentrated in a five-day period ending May 9, with party, government, and mass organizations being called upon to organize and carry out activities at all levels of society in celebration of the victory. Highlights are to be a joint armed forces - workers meeting in the Kremlin palace of congresses on February 8, and an "all people's" holiday on the 9th. A military parade may be held on the final day of the festivities.

The main themes of the celebration will be the leading role the CPSU played in the war, the unity of party and people, the pre-eminent contribution of the Soviet armed forces to the defeat of Germany and Japan, and the military might of the Soviet state. World War II will be portrayed, as usual, as a conflict between imperialism and socialism. Other themes will be the importance of national resistance movements in occupied territory, the need for improved ideological work in the armed forces (the subject of an ongoing campaign) and military preparedness.

While the lengthy announcement is basically an "anti-imperialist" diatribe, the contribution of the "anti-Hitler coalition" to the war effort and present-day detente both received brief but positive treatment. The allied effort during the war is cited as an example of the possibility of cooperation between states with differing social systems. Detente, which the announcement alleges had its genesis in the peace proposals of the 24th party congress, is described as a positive step, but the document cautions that the forces of reaction and aggression are still active and that continued vigilance is mandatory.

The Soviets have attempted to enlist governments of the other allied powers in large-scale joint ceremonies commemorating the victory, but so far have not made much headway. Some minor activities, on the scale of previous annual celebrations, are planned in various West European countries--excluding Germany.

There is little indication so far as to how the Soviets will handle the touchy role of Stalin during the war. He was not mentioned in the Central Committee document, and the emphasis placed on the party--rather than on any individual--suggests that Stalin's contribution will be treated circumspectly. One new Soviet movie depicts Stâlin as confused and indecisive after the Nazi invasion, but as developing into a strong leader as the war progressed. Such attempts at realism may become standard in handling this problem.

Brezhnev's position is also being treated somewhat ambiguously. He is mentioned only once--in pro forma fashion--in the Central Committee announcement. His wartime role has received some favorable press publicity recently, although his name was conspicuously omitted from at least one Pravda account of the activities of his unit during the conflict. The above omission may indicate possible uncertainty about the future of Brezhnev's role in the collective when he resumes his duties.

Pravda Has Kind Words
for Armenian Efforts

Pravda reported on February 4 that a recent plenum of the Armenian party Central Committee had pointed out major shortcomings in economic and cultural programs in the republic, as well as omissions in ideological and educational work there. Pravda also said that the plenum participants had expressed "profound gratitude" to the CPSU Central Committee for its "constant great concern" for the development of the republic's economy and culture. The report ended with a prediction that communists and all working people in Armenia "would not stint their strength and energy" in their struggle to fulfill the targets for 1975 and for the five-year plan as a whole.

This is the most positive assessment of the situation in Armenia to appear in Pravda since K. S. Demirchyan replaced A. Ye. Kochinyan as republic party boss there last November. It may be another sign that the authorities in Moscow are confident that Demirchyan is well on his way toward putting Armenia's house in order. Republic premier A. G. Arzumanyan had given a similar hint in a Komsomolskaya Pravda article on January 7. Responding to the annual CPSU Central Committee appeal for fulfillment of the economic plans, Arzumanyan emphasized the steps being taken in the republic to put an end to the shortcomings that had been exposed at the November plenum there, when Demirchyan replaced Kochinyan.

A somewhat negative note was struck, however, by the Komsomol Central Committee Bureau resolution, published in Komsomolskaya Pravda on February 5, on the work of Armenian Komsomol units in preparing for the exchange of Komsomol documents scheduled to begin next month. Although the resolution contains some praise for the Armenian Komsomol, the shortcomings that are mentioned reflect unfavorably upon the republic party organization's supervision of the local Komsomol units. These shortcomings are hardly unique to the Armenian organization, but it may have been singled out for public criticism to keep the pressure on Demirchyan to continue with his house-cleaning.

February 11, 1975
